1. Bob Dylan once wrote: "There's no success like failure and failure's no success at all." I'm not sure what that means, but I do know these guys think failure served them right. John Taylor of DURAN DURAN explained why:

JOHN TAYLOR ACTUALITY: (:37) "The last album that we made was a dismal failure, but we're fairly philosophical about dismal failures in this band. We tend to say, 'well, we'll just have to do better next time. When are we starting? 'Cause we like to record, you know, we love to write. I don't think anything that could happen to the band would ever put us off that. It's like, if things are going bad, it's like quick, lets go and write! Let's do something! We believe in ourselves, you know, we didn't feel we were gonna be destined to cabaret land. We knew we had something to offer. It was just timing and getting the songwriting, I mean, you know, music is our bag and I always hope to be able to make it and talk about it."

2. This next band first came together in church. Dwayne Wiggins gave us the whole story behind the beginning of TONY, TONI, TONE.

DWAYNE WIGGINS ACTUALITY: (:44) "Because of our ages being so far apart, I grew up and I was like, I'm older than you and they went to a different church and they had their own little clique, and I had my clique and then we come home, when we trade ideas and jam and then write our own little songs and stuff, but we never formed a group, and then Tim would comeover and we all writing, and just came up with stuff and what we were writing at that time was, it wasn't commercial at all, it was more, what was it like? It was more just, like the Police on that vein. It was just the three of us, guitar, bass and a drums, and it was listen music, for musicians, if you know what I mean. And so we didn't get down into the commercial part of it, writing dance style stuff until we got the rest of the band together."
