

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

SHOW 834-6

AIRDATE: Nov. 5&6, 1983

THE RONETTES, the singing group with the highest bouffants in rock history, were formed by Ronnie Bennett and her sister, Estell, in New York back in 1959. They used to appear at the Peppermint Lounge with Twister Joey Dee. In 1963, super-producer Phil Spector heard them and cut their first single. Phil's a man who takes his work seriously, so no one was surprised when he married Ronnie of The Ronettes. After all, the music they made together was titled "Be My Baby."

WALTER SHENSON, the man who produced The Beatles' movies may have known little about The Beatles before he started, but he rapidly became a Beatlemaniac, bringing in director Richard Lester and Liverpool writer Alun Owen. It was Shenson who came up with the movie's plot, a day in the life of The Beatles. "A Hard Day's Night" was shot on a tiny budget because the studio was worried that The Beatles were merely a fad. But after that film's fabulous success, when it came time to make the next one, they were only too happy to offer unlimited "Help!"

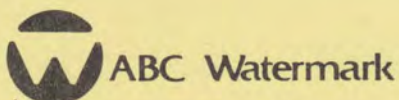

Plus this week an incredible week of anniversaries for John Lennon.

We'll also chat with Jack Ely of The Kingsem about his diction.

Our movie memory this week is "Cleopatra," the world's most expensive film and the beginning of the marriages of Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor.
